AVING now gone through the feveral Branches of the Argument against Excises, I shall leave the Merchanis to desend their own Cause, as They may judge proper, when the Particulars of the Scheme are more fully explain'd; and I cannot conceal my Satisfaction, upon observing that what I have written upon this Subject seems agreeable to the Sentiments of these Gentlemen; for the seasonable Resolutions, which, I am told, They have lately taken to oppose an Excise, under any Shape, by all dutiful and lawful Methods, are sufficient to justify the Course of these Papers, and to convince the World that I have not endeavoured to alarm Them without just Grounds.

My chief Design in this Enquiry was to give the Publick a sull State of the Subject, in general, without entering into any Particulars; and therefore I would not suffer the Thread of my Argument to be interrupted by any of those Objections to it, which have been thrown out in some dails Papers; for though I promifed to consider every Thing of Weight, that sould be urged on the other Side, it cannot be expected that I should turn immediately out of the Road, to combat such Adversaries as have hitherto appeared against me. Nay, I believe the Projectors Themselves would be very unwilling to have it thought that the Stress of their Argument lies in those Papers; and therefore I chuse to wait a Week or two longer, in Expectation of seeing the Subject undertaken by some fore I chuse to wait a Week or two longer, in Ex-pectation of seeing the Subject undertaken by some abler and better instructed Hands. However, if it should appear that the Projectors are refolved to purfue their Scheme, and reft the Merits of it on the Writings of these Gentlemen, the Force of their Objections shall be lered in due Time; and if They have nothing in Reserve, much more to the Purpose than what They have already produced, They will be so far from having any Reason to triumph, that my Argument will appear with new Strength and Lustre upon such an Exa-

For this Reason, I hope my Correspondents will not take it ill that I have hitherto made so little Use of those Papers, with which They have already favoured me; for They will easily perceive, from what I have said, that I reserve Them for another Occasion; and if They will please to furnish me with any farther Lights, They may depend on my paying Them all proper Regard, as far as They concur with the Design of this Undertaking, and will serve to clear up the Point in Dispute.

In the mean Time, it will be proper to recapitulate

In the mean Time, it will be proper to recapitulate the Substance of my general Argument. as it hath been deduced in the preceeding Papers, and lay it in one View before the Publick.

First then, it appears that as the Prosperity, Riches and Strength of this Nation depend on Trade, so all possible Encouragement ought to be given to the Prosecution of it; and the Merchant, or Trader, being the most useful Member of the Commonweith, hath a Right, at least, to the common Privileges of his Fellow-Subjects; whereas no Person, under the Laws of Excise, can be properly called a Freeman, or an Englishman. low Subjects; whereas no Person, under the Laws of Excise, can be properly called a Freeman, or an Englishman, being deprived of that great and fundamental Privilege of Magna Charta, a Trial by Juries, and subjected to the arbitrary Determination of Court Officers, who are not only Prosecutors, Evidence and Judges in their own Cause, but, being absolutely dependent on the Crown, for the Continuance of their Places, may be transpared in had Beisman to give unjust Sentences a Crown, for the Continuance of their Places, may be tempted, in bad Reigns, to give unjust Sentences against particular Men, in Order to gratify the Malice, or Avarice, of a corrupt Minister. Nor is This the only bad Gircumstance of Excises, with Regard to Trade; for no Man can properly call his Goods his own, even after the Duty is paid, being always liable to the Inquisition of little Officers, who too often think it their Duty to be as vexatious as possible; nor can the Trader dispose of Them without a Permit from one of these Officers; which, besides the Fatigue to Himself, and the Air of Slavery, that it carries along with it, must prove very prejudicial to the Course of his Business.

It hath likewise been proved (I think, beyond Dispute) that Excises affect the Cause of Liberty in general, as well as the particular Interest of Trade, which have, indeed, a mutual Dependence on each other; for the vast Number of civil Officers, which the Execution of sub a Scheme will necessarily spread through all Parts of the Kingdom, must consequently have a very great Instance

Kingdom, must confequently have a very great Influence in the EleBian of Member: to ferre in Parliament; on the Freedom and Independency of which the Welfare of the whole Nation, the Liberties of the People, and the very Being of the Conftitution absolutely depend.

I have also traced the Origin of Excises, as far as History gives us any clear Light into Them, and shewn by what Methods They were first introduced into these Parts of Europe; from whence it appears that They have constantly been the Forerunners of arbitrary Power, and were never suffer'd in any free Country, till Convulsions in Government, and pressing Exigences of State have made Them necessary. It is likewise evident from this Enquiry that They have been seldom or never laid aside, when once raised, though under the most plausible Pretences and Promises that They were intended only to supply a presem Necessary, and should be taken off again.

From thence I proceeded to the Nature of a general

as foon as the Occasion ceas'd.

From thence I proceeded to the Nature of a general Excise; and have, I believe, convinced every difinterested Man in England that the Execution of this Scheme can end in nothing less than such a general, extended Tax, in whatever Sense it may be understood; especially, if We consider the Multiplicity of Excises, both on native and imported Commodities, already established in this Kingdom, which have begun to infinuate Themselves into private Exmission as well as audicid Hause. It hash been proved Families, as well as publick Houses. It hath been proved, at least, that this Projest hath a direct and immediate Tendency to such a general Excise, as hath been con-flaulty opposed by the best Englishmen in all Ages, parti-cularly since the Revolution, and seems calculated to bring a LORD-DANE (as Mr. Hampden observes) into every one of our Families.

Having made these Remarks on Excises in general, and Having made these Remarks on Excises in general, and the Scheme now in Agitation, with Regard to the Trade, Liberties and Constitution of Great Britain, I proceeded to the Letter-writer's Objections to Duties on Importation, under the several Articles of Drawbacks, Pramiums on prompt Payment, Charges of Commission, Frands, Smugling, &c. and I flatter my self that I have evinced the Fallacy, or Falshood of all his Arguments and Affertions on these Heads; for I think it demonstrable that the Convession of the Customs into Excises would be so far from remedying any of these Evils, real or supposed, that it must have a quite contrary Effect; and the Advantages proposed by it seem equally groundless and chimerical. The People, I am sure, can receive no Ease from such a Scheme, however the Projectors may flatter Them with it, unless Poverty and Slavery are to be esteemed Blessings; and I leave the World to judge whether a Decrease of Trade (which is the natural and almost necessary Consequence of the other) is likely to be attended with an Im-Trade (which is the natural and almost necessary Confequence of the other) is likely to be attended with an Improvement of the Revenue. But supposing That to be the Case, I hope the single Consideration of some Advantage to the Crown will never be put in Competition with the Liberties and Constitution of a tubole Nation.

The Practice of Holland hath been so much trumpeted in our Ears, on this Occasion, both within Doors and without, that I thought it necessary to shew the monftrous Inconclusiveness and Absurdity of such Reasonings from the different Circumstances of the two Nations, in from Inconclusivenes and Absurdity of such Reasonings from the different Circumstances of the two Nations, in almost every Particular. I have likewise observed that the Excises of Helland differ very materially from Those in England, and that their Officers have not the same Power to search Houses, or keep the People under Subjection. Indeed, this Argument, drawn from the Use of Excises in Holland, is so very ridiculous, as well as impolitick, that I hope the Projectors and their Advocates will have the Modesty to insist upon it no longer; but We may see from hence to what little Shifts Men are driven, when They engage in Projects, so contrary to the Interests and Inclinations of a whole People.

Lasty, I have consider'd this Scheme in view to a Land-Tax; the Reduction, or Abolition of which hath been thrown out as a Bait to catch weak and unthinking Minds; but I hope They are now sufficiently arm'd against such a Snare by the Reasonings of Mr. Locke and Mr. Hampden, whose excellent Judgment and good Sense have been as little disputed, as their Zeal and Affection for those Principles of Liberty, on which the present Government is so happily establish'd.

I have, at the same Time, taken particular Care to prevent any Misrepresentation of my Meaning, as if I was pleading for the Continuance of a Land-Tax; which is so far from being my Design, that I have all along ac-was pleading for the Continuance of a Land-Tax; which was pleading for the Continuance of a Land-Tax; which is fo far from being my Defign, that I have all along acknowledged the great Hardthip of it, and contended as much as any Man for a Reduction of our Expenses, which is the only effectual Way of eafing the British Land bolders. It is, indeed, for this Reason that I have exerted the Reduction of Orenwell to prevent the Reduktion. my Endeavours fo strenuously to prevent the Establishment of a general Excise, which would end in a perpetual Land-Tax on their Estates, under another Name, infinitely more grievous and burthensome than was ever yet felt in this Kingdom.

I have likewife added a feafonable Caution, that as a general Excise will certainly be permanent, when once obtain'd, so the Exemption of Land will be only temporary and precarious, perhaps for a Year or two only; or as long as the Affairs of Europe may continue in their present State of Tranquilty; but it is ridigalous to suppose that the Projectors will not have Recounce to a Land-Tax, upon the first extraordinary Occasion for Money; and thus the Freeholders of Great Britain may live to see Themselve and did with both these Burthens at the same Time.

The Reader and now the Sum of my Armant in one View, from which He will be the better to judge of the feveral Points, on which it is founded, and to which the Advocates for Excises ought to give a direct Answer, if They are resolved to proceed in the Unification of their School. Justification of their Scheme.

Justification of their Scheme.

But I hope They will chuse to desist, and give us one Instance of their real Concern for the Principles of Liberty and the Interest of their Country, by refusing to facrifice Them, in so essential a Point, for any lurrative Confiderations.

I shall therefore conclude the whole with observing, that if this Scheme hath such a manifest Tendency to a general Excise, or to bring the People of England under the Laws and Officers of Excise, in Opposition to Magna Charta itself and the fundamental Laws of our Constitution; if it is of such pernicious Consequence to the Trade, Manufashures and Navigation of this Kingdom, and cannot possibly answer one good, or salutary End proposed by it; but, on the contrary, will put a sinishing Hand to all our Misfortunes, and deprive us of our most distinguishing Privileges above other Nations; if This, I say, should appear to be the Case, We have Reason to hope that our Representatives in Parliament will reject the very Proposal of such a Scheme with the utmost Indignation; and if the Projector should continue to projecute it, in Desyance of Reason and against the general Sense of the whole People, I must seave the Warld shall therefore conclude the whole with observing, protected it, in Deryance of Reason and against the general Sense of the whole People, I must leave the World to judge whether it will not be an undeniable Proof that they are more sollicitous after Power, than the Welfare of their Country, or the Honour and Happiness of his Majesty's Government.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Bruffels, Dec. 12. Our Accounts from Holland grow daily more fatal, with Regard to incredible Number of Vermin, and the terrible Havock made by them. They usually enter at the Bottom of the Stakes, and eat throthe Heart of the thickest Timber, quite up to the Surface of the Water, upon which down they fall, and come in stoating with the Tide. The Dykes of North Holland suffer most, which happens still worse, being most exposed to Inundations. According to the Reports made by the Surintendants of Drenterlant to the States the Surintendants of Drenterlant to the States made by the Surintendants of Drenterlant to the States General, 1122 Stakes are already gone in those Parts within the Compass of about 4000 Yards; the Loss thereby is computed at 1,600,000 Dutch Florins. The Surintendants of the Dykes in other Places have made also their Reports, and rather exceed the former in their Computation. In short, they declare the common Revenues within their Districts not sufficent to make up the Districts and sufficient to make Revenues within their Districts not sufficient to make up the Damages sustained, unless their High Mightiucsses surans furnish them with a round Sum of Money and Materials out of the publick Treasury. In several Places they have made Counter Dykes, but in others where the Danger is more insminent, the Peasants have taken up their All and left the Country, for Fear of being suddenly swallow'd up by a Deluge. The States have ordered publick Prayers ever since the 18th of October last, and require the Ministers, of what Religion or celt soever, to exhort their respective Congregations to join in Prayers on this calamitous Occasions to appeare the Prayers on this calamitous Occasion, to appeale the Wrath of Heaven, which has fent them such a Scourge as feems to threaten no less than the total Overthro of the Republick

They write from Edinburgh, Dec. 5. That the Week before was tried before the Barons of the Exchequer, 'a Caufe wherein his Majesty was Plaintiff, and Mr. George Dishington, late Supervifor of the Salt Duties in the Collection of Aloa, and prefent Bailiff of the Burg of Inverkeithing, Defendant, upon an Arrear refting by the Defendant to the Crown, on Account of the Salt Duties, which he alledged to have paid to Walter Grocet, Esq.; Collector of the Customs and Salt Duties at Aloa; but upon hearing his Majesty's Advocate General for the Crown, and Mr. Dundas for the Defendant, and he the faid Defendant being convicted of the Fality of the abovemention'd Allegation, the Jury brought in their Verdict mention'd Allegation, the Jury brought in their Verdiet for the Crown; and this Day Judgment was figured against him for 300 l. sterling, and a Capias issued out of the Court of Exchequer, for apprehending and securing him wherever he can be found in the Kingdom. From Paris we learn that an extraordinary Courier from Seville has brought the Marques de Castelhar a Confirmation of what passed at Oran on the 21st and 23d of last Month, with these Particulars: That the Marques de Santa Cruz, Governor of the Town, having Courier than the court of the Court has the court of the Course of the Court of the C fally'd forth on the zift to attack the Moors on all Sides, and perceiving a Detachment of Spanish Troops much distressed by a large Body of Moorish Horse, march'd with some of the Cavalry to their Assistance: ne, the Moors were discomsted after the Loss of a confiderable Number; but the Marquess de Santa Cruz, the Marquess de Valdecanas, Col. Don Joseph Pinel, and some other Officers of Distinction who put themfelves at the Head of the Detachment, were kill'd; the rest of the Spanish Troops having chaced the E from all their Posts, came and joined the Body of the Army, when being much fatigued, and Night approaching, they returned all into the Town. On the 23d the ing, they returned Sub-Governor made a second general Sally, and finding but a faint Refiftance, entirely routed and purfued the Enemy. After which the Spaniards levell'd their Works, and nail'd up their Cannon. 'Tis reckon'd the Moors had those two Days above 10,000 Me kill'd or wounded, which is much the same with nem, for having neither Physician or Surgeon amongst them, if a Man's Moore had been not very form, or threaten his Life, their Wounds heal not very foon, or threaten his Life, their ufus Way is to cut off his Head to prevent his languishing. The Spaniards had about 600 kill'd, as well gaifhing : Officers, 28 Soldiers, and about 1500 wounded. The Marchioness de Santa Cruz, who arrived at Oran form Time before, was brought to Bed not above four Davs before the heard of her Husband being kill'd. Marques de Cattelhar having been to wait on the King to acquaint him swith the News, his Majesty express'd much Concern for the Loss of the Marques de Santa Cruz.
